

At night, Ryann Phillips becomes an open psychic channel, her dreams flooded with random snapshots of strangers lives. Few of her premonitions make sense, or even cause her to lose much sleep. Until now. The vicious murder scene she envisions is so terrifying-and so vivid-she has no choice but to somehow warn the victim. When she spots Victoria Joyce in a coffee shop, Ryann prepares to run up against a wall of skepticism. Yet convincing the no-nonsense attorney shes in danger proves easier than convincing her divorce lawyer. The arrogant-and devastatingly sexy-Trevor Kearney. Trevor never thought his client would stoop so low as to hire a fake psychic to prove her soon-to-be ex is out to kill her. Yet sassy, red-headed Ryann holds up under questioning designed to blow the tightest of alibis. Before the night is over, she has his apology. And he has her phone number. Ryann can live with Trevors doubts about her sixth sense, yet she cant ignore the way her body responds when he kisses her senseless. But as they seek to untangle a growing web of mystery, the heat they generate could put them in the path of a killer...

Rich. Melheim,. DMin. Part 1: Preja Vu There is no reason to be a student of the future unless, of course, you plan to spend the bulk of the rest of your life there. I call this kind of parental preparation and thinking preja vu. It hasn't happened yet , but it's going to! You may wish to pray it forward and get started rightaway. Sign a bloody striker. Deja vu is when you feel like something has happened before. Preja vu is when you feel like something that happened before is about to.
