

Workplace Violence Among Law Enforcement discusses the profession of law enforcement from a statistical viewpoint in terms of violent occurrences. These violent occurrences are not always fatal, yet law enforcement more than any other profession possesses the highest risk of a demonstration of fatal or non-fatal violence. In depicting this violence the case of Carl Buntion and James Irby would be a center of focus. A look at 50 other cases would be part of a major three year study of the FBI in determining the motives and likelihoods of these attacks. It would seem these individuals possess an inclination of concealing weapons. Much of the time these individuals are trained in the use of firearms even more so than the officers who legally possess the weapons. Officers who fail to comply by regulations find-out their inclinations are eventually going to be wrong when the suspect-offender makes the decision to avoid capture at all costs. Whether these thoughts and attacks are premature or premeditated, the violence associating with the workplace among law enforcement is of really no comparison.
